

THE PROGRESS OF CIVIL SERVICE.

While there is a good deal of humiliation at the working of the civil service system under a democratic administration, there is also considerable humor in the business. The administration is doing one thing in regard to civil service and at the same time preaching another thing. Herein is found a humiliating commentary on this "business administration." Some of the wide-awake, courageous, all-around, unrepentant, bourbon-democrats have a system of civil service which is Jacksonian and democratic with the rank of, and they tell the truth about what the democrats want and what this "public trust" business really means, and herein is found the humor. The boldness of these unrepentant-out-and-out Jacksonian democrats who believe in telling the country just what the democratic party is and why republicans are removed from office, is found in Virginia. He was appointed revenue collector for the district of Virginia, and when he moved the republican stamp collector at Norfolk, he was honest enough to tell him the reason why he was removed which he did in the following kind note:

RICHMOND, Sept. 5, 1885.
DEAR SIR:—It affords me pleasure to say that your duties as stamp collector at Norfolk for the period from the 15th of June to the 31st of August, 1885, were entirely satisfactory. Your removal from office was not from any delinquency or inefficiency, but entirely upon the principle that "the victor belongs the spoils"—you being an appointee of the Malbone republican party. I wish you health and prosperity in the future, which I think you deserve. Very truly yours,
A. HAZARD, Collector.

In this little note will be found a lesson on honesty which the administration will do well to study carefully and profit thereby. In Mr. Hazard's case, the mask is taken off. His frankness commands respect, even if his judgment is at fault. He is not ashamed to put down in writing the over-cherished democratic principle that the spoils of office belong to the victors. Proclaiming such doctrine from the house-top at this particular time when the administration is trying to ride two horses, each going in an opposite direction, may not please the authorities at Washington, but it will strike sober observers as being quite timely. As one straightforward-spoils-of-office democrat has been found who is not ashamed to confess before men, the senate ought to honor him with a prompt confirmation.

NO TARIFF REVISION.

The reports from Washington which have appeared as special dispatches to a great many papers, say that Congressmen Morrison does not think there is any use in attempting a revision of the tariff at this session of congress. The substance of his opinion is that if the committee on ways and means should agree upon some plan of revision and report a bill, the house would at all to pieces and disfigure it so that the result would be worse than no revision at all. No two men here can agree upon anything, and every man insists upon having his own ideas adopted. If the committee should report a bill to place some special article on the free list, like works of art, for which there are so many petitions, Morrison says it would be buried under an avalanche of amendments and would ultimately be killed of its own weight. He does not think there is any sense of attempting a revision unless it is done in committee, where each item can be carefully studied and that would be a waste of time, because the house would tend to tatters any bill the committee might frame.

Thus does the outlook for free traders seem hopeless. They did think that when a strong democratic majority in the house was elected, and a democrat was put at the head of national affairs, there would be some hope for democratic free trade. But congress, however dull it may be in some directions, is not dull in understanding the temper of the people on the tariff question; and that is the reason why Mr. Morrison and his free trade followers are losing hope. Just at this time, more all others, there should be no disturbance of the tariff question. Business is too much unsettled now, but it will be more unsettled than ever if threats are made to repeal or amend any part of the present tariff law.

John Randolph Tucker, of Virginia, chairman of the house judiciary committee, at Washington, is one of the ripest scholars in congress. He is a polished gentleman, and has a warm heart and a kind word for everybody who needs the influence of one and the encouragement of the other. Garfield had been in congress some time before Tucker entered, and during that time had not found a member who could sympathize with him in his literary studies. He had heard of Tucker's scholarly attainments and of his high social qualities, and at once made his acquaintance. One was a radical republican, the other a strong partisan democrat. But when the work of the session was over for the day, these two men were bound together by one common interest, and between them there existed a closer friendship than existed between any other two members of congress. The friendship of Jonathan and David was not warmer than that of Garfield and Tucker. They met often, loved each other, read the classics together and found infinite delight in their companionship; and when Garfield died, there was no one outside of the Garfield family, whose sorrow was more genuine or overpowering than John Randolph Tucker's.

The return of John Sherman to the United States senate for the term of six years commencing on the 4th of March, 1887, recalls the fact that he stands solitary and alone as the senator who sat in the body when the civil war began. He was elected to congress thirty-two years ago; was returned in three consecutive contests, and was once within a scratch of reaching the speaker's chair. Strange as it may seem now, he was defeated by a resolution of inquiry sprung upon the house relating to his judgment of the "impending crisis," a somewhat radical anti-slavery work of that day. While the house was in a general sense republican, many shuddered at abolitionism, and Sherman's endorsement of the abolition took defeated his election as speaker. After pondering around for some time, Ex-Governor Pennington, of New Jersey, an easy-going, conservative republican, was elected.

The news comes from Madison that President John Bascom, of the state university, has tendered his resignation to the board of regents, and has requested that it shall take effect on the first of June. President Bascom has done well in tending his resignation, and the board of regents will do well in accepting it. In some respects President Bascom is an able man and a fine educator, but through lack of judgment and want of proper balance under certain conditions he has unfortunately thrown himself into many local quarrels which ill befit a gentleman of his profession and standing. He began to look to see that he would rather get up a fight on the prohibition question than to preach or to teach.

The manner in which reform in Ohio is working is pretty well illustrated by the remarks of Colonel C. W. Woolley, a lifelong democrat of Cincinnati, who said the other day: "I am told that most of the presidential appointments made in Ohio by President Cleveland have been made upon the recommendations of Senator Payne and Governor Hoadly, and yet I believe that nineteen out of twenty of them should be in the Ohio penitentiary to-day."

The West Virginia girl who committed suicide because her parents would not allow her to become a Mormon was wiser than many might suppose. If she had been allowed to join the saints the chances are that she would have wanted to commit suicide after she had learned what sinners the saints really were and when the trouble would all have been ahead. She showed good sense, allied as she was with the polygamous disease, in putting herself beyond the reach of the wiles of the Mormon leaders.

The president has signed the presidential succession bill and therefore it is a law. The people can now rest easy, and the president can eat what he pleases, go where he pleases and take no more care of himself than if he were an ordinary mortal. In case of an accident his party and his place are provided for.

AT REST IN THE TOMB.

Funeral Services Over Miss Day's Remains at the First Methodist Church.
WEDNESDAY, Jan. 20.—The funeral of Miss Katherine Lee Day took place at the Old Swedes church, Tuesday afternoon. The funeral was as private as possible. There were a number of friends of the secretary in attendance, and relatives of the family. The remains were placed in a casket and carried to the cemetery by a hearse, and after taking a seat near the pulpit, the remains were placed in a casket covered with black cloth and mounted in silver. It was literally heaped with flowers wrought in the most exquisite designs. Rev. Charles Brock read the burial service, and prayer was offered by the Rev. Dr. Martin. After prayer the clergy preceded the remains to the vault where they were laid to rest. The casket was conveyed by six carriers—Senators Gray, George H. Baker, Esq., Henry G. Bang, Esq., Dr. A. Draper, Victor Day, Esq., and E. L. Colburn, acting as pall-bearers. Among those present from Washington were Secretaries Whitney and Endicott; Senator Wade Hampton, of South Carolina; Judge Cleveland's private secretary, J. L. Latham; Senator Jackson, of Mississippi; Senator Ransom, of North Carolina; and Dr. Wharton, counsel for the state department.

WITH REFERENCE TO PROHIBITION.

An Important Decision in Iowa—An Ap- point for License.

KEOKUK, Iowa, Jan. 20.—In the United States court, Tuesday, Judge Love announced that a decision had been received by him from Judge Brewer which was directly applicable to the Iowa prohibitory liquor law. The decision of Judge Brewer, in the case spoken of, effects a complete overthrow of the prohibitory law. Should the opinion be concurred in by the Iowa judges, then all breweries in existence before the passage of the law could not be interfered with. The opinion declares such statutes unconstitutional, because it is taking property without a consideration. A distinction is made in this case from the saloon cases recently remanded to the state courts. The question of selling property constructed for a lawful business did not enter in the saloon cases.

Joachim Miller Heard from.
WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 20.—Joachim Miller, in an interview Tuesday in regard to the distressing condition of his daughter Maude, said that he did not know she was in needy circumstances until Monday night, and then promptly sent her money to come to him. Mr. Miller recently received a promise of a performance in New Orleans with his daughter's name upon it, which was the last he heard of her until Monday night, when he received her letter. He supposed she was all right and doing well.

BRITISH FINANCIERS

INTERESTED IN THE ARGENTIFEROUS DEBATES IN OUR SENATE.

"Don't Care a Rap" for the Arguments, But Waiting for Action—Bond Payment in Silver Called Repudiation—An Astonisher from Gladstone.

BOSTON, Jan. 20.—The Globe's London cable has the following relating to the silver question in this country:
Your correspondent has conversed with a number of city bankers and financial people of the city within a few days past for the purpose of getting at the general sentiment as to how the silver agitation in America is likely to affect the money systems of the world. Perhaps the average view may be best expressed by the following summary of the statements made by an influential banker in response to the question what he thought of the arguments put forth by the silver men in congress:

"We don't care a rap for their arguments," he said, "they do care considerably what they do. Their arguments are worth just as much as those of a merchant trying to dispose of his wares. They have got silver to sell, and they are trying to force it into use as money. I don't care a rap for their arguments, and I don't care a rap for the silver men's arguments. I am interested only in what they finally do. If America adopts a limited silver coinage, of course all the gold will come over here. The effect will be to slightly cheapen gold and raise prices, but I don't anticipate any serious disturbance of values from that source. And on the other hand, if America tries to limit the gold supply, it will simply be playing into our hands. We will be doing our unpleasant work for us. It is a convenience for a gold standard nation to have some other nation offer to absorb silver and to keep it at a fixed ratio with gold. It soothes values, but at the expense of the nation trying it. For this reason Bismarck, while insisting upon gold alone for Germany, always secretly supported the Latin union by which France and Belgium have carried the silver load for him. I shouldn't be surprised if he were secretly lending his influence in aid of the bimetallic movement in America. But the really important question to us is whether the United States will try to pay their bonds in silver. We don't, however, entertain much fear of such repudiation."

"Then you do not admit that the word coin means either gold or silver?" asked the correspondent.

"No," replied the banker, "we didn't so understand it when we took the bonds. Of course if they offer us silver, we will take it, but in that case the next time they want to borrow they will have to put the word 'gold' in the bonds, and will have to pay a higher rate of interest, too."

I have ascertained that the recent slight fall in United States bonds was occasioned by a singular misunderstanding of what had occurred in congress. I have had access to the original dispatch agency, the reading of which caused the hurry. It reads: "Resolution senate pay bonds silver." This was carelessly interpreted as meaning that the senate had passed such a resolution; in other words that one-half of congress had voted to pay the bonds in silver. The effect was only temporary, and since it has come to be understood that a resolution was merely offered for debate, and that if anything is done at all, it will be at some remote day when the securities have returned to former quotations.

A Threat From the League.

DUBLIN, Jan. 20.—The regular fortnightly meeting of the National League was held here Tuesday afternoon. Mr. William Leach, member of parliament for South Down, said: "England has enemies everywhere, and the first blow struck at Ireland would fire a train for the attack on a successful Indian mutiny and lighting the fuse into London to stable their horses in the house of commons. No power on earth could prevent retaliation by the Irish. The Parliaments are resolved to persevere in their demand for home rule."

WILL FIGHT THE WAR OUT.

Garrett, of the D. & O., Makes a Statement—Pennsylvania Meets the Cut.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 20.—President Garrett, of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad, made a statement Tuesday night bearing on the rate-war between the Pennsylvania and Baltimore & Ohio roads. Mr. Garrett hints that it is only in extreme cases that rate cutting is justifiable. He then says: "No trunk line resisted longer or more vigorously than the Baltimore & Ohio railroad the growing domination in rates, or the starvation barrier since September last to bring about a restoration of harmony between the trunk lines and stability in charges for transportation, both freight and passenger. The passenger rates now in force by the Baltimore & Ohio from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington to the west, were established in May, 1885, by the Pennsylvania Railroad company, and the Baltimore & Ohio is simply maintaining them, declining it is true to advance them in December last when the other trunk lines increased theirs, for the good reason that it was invited to enter a pool with a nominal membership and without real facilities for receiving proper benefits therefrom. The Baltimore & Ohio desires stability of rates, but will fight this matter to the end, preferring national legislation to reaching from its position."

The Pennsylvania road people announce that they will sell tickets from Baltimore and Washington to the west at Baltimore & Ohio rates; that is, to St. Louis, $16.50; to Chicago, $25; to Cincinnati, $11.

The best on earth can be truly said of Griggs' Glycerine Salve, which is a sure and speedy cure for cuts, bruises, scalds, burns, wounds and all other sores.
